Zhang Lan had a heart surgery this year, and spent 100,000 yuan on the operation. Based on the idea of “insurance first, social assistance second”, medical assistance was then provided by the MCA. Medical assistance covered 75% of the rest. Medical insurance covered 70%.
For low-income individuals or individuals that live on minimum living standard guarantee that apply for medical assistance, family members that live with the above-mentioned individuals need to submit written applications to the towns and townships (sub-districts) where their households are registered as well as the following materials:

1. Receipts for clinical care or hospitalization in Beijing and separation certificates on expense settlement issued by authorities governing Urban Employee Basic Medical Insurance, Urban Resident Basic Medical Insurance, New Rural Cooperative Medical System (NRCMS), etc.

2. Certificates of diagnosis issued by medical institutions designated by the medical insurances or the NRCMS of Beijing Municipality.

3. Certificates of diagnosis issued by 2\textsuperscript{nd} level (including 2\textsuperscript{nd} level) medical institutions designated by the medical insurances or the NRCMS of Beijing Municipality when diagnosed with critical illness.

4. Copies of Service Certificates for Child-Bearing in the cases of pregnancy or childbirth.
Towns and townships are responsible for examining the Certificate on Minimum Living Standard Guarantee and Low-Income Certificate, and instructing the applicants to fill the “Application Form”.
Towns and townships (sub-districts) verify how much medical assistance the applicants have received in one year. If the materials are flawless and the information is accurate, then applicants may record the related information into the medical assistance system, write down the amount and assistance suggestions on the “Application Form”, submit personal information to the district MCA through the medical assistance system and deliver the materials in written form to the district MCA timely for examination and approval.
