RECENT AND PROSPECTIVE CHANGES IN TRADE, AID AND THE CURRENT ACCOUNT BALANCE

Introduction

This report will review recent and prospective developments in international trade, foreign aid, and the current account balance in OECD, OPEC, non-OPEC developing countries, and centrally planned economies. It will further provide a brief interpretation of these trends. Actual developments in 1980, estimates for 1981, and prospective changes in 1982 will be considered in the report. 1/

Developments in 1980

International Trade

As shown in Table 1, the rate of growth of GDP (the gross domestic product) of the OECD countries declined from 3.3 percent in 1979 to 1.5 percent in 1980. The change in import volume was even greater, with an increase of 8.2 percent in 1979 being followed by a decline of 1.25 percent in 1980. The major factor in this decline was the 13 percent fall in oil imports from OPEC, reflecting the effects of oil-saving measures in the OECD countries. By contrast, OECD imports from non-OPEC developing countries rose by 7 percent in volume terms as the imports of manufactured goods continued to increase, albeit at a lower rate than in previous years. Finally, the volume of OECD imports from the centrally planned economies declined slightly.

The volume of OECD exports to all destinations rose by 4 percent in 1980, with the largest increases experienced in OPEC markets (12 percent) followed by the non-OPEC developing countries (9.5 percent), the centrally planned economies (3 percent) and intra-OECD trade (2.75 percent). Nevertheless, with the 70 percent rise in oil prices, the balance of trade of the OECD countries continued to deteriorate. These countries experienced a trade deficit of $73 billion in 1980, compared to a deficit of $39 billion in 1979. At the same time, the trade deficit of the non-OPEC developing countries rose from $33 billion to $48 billion, reflecting in large part the rise in oil prices.

The deterioration in the trade balance of the two groups of oil-importing countries had its counterpart in the rise of the OPEC trade surplus, from $107 billion in 1979 to $167 billion in 1980. Service payments and private transfers, chiefly royalties paid to oil companies and workers' remittances, offset nearly one-third of this surplus. Still, the OPEC countries had a surplus of $113 billion in the goods, services, and private transfers balance in 1980, compared to deficits of $48 billion in the OECD countries and $71 billion in the non-OPEC developing countries. In the same year, the centrally planned economies were in an approximate balance.

Foreign Assistance

The balance-of-payments statistics reported in Table 2 show an increase in net official transfers of the OECD countries from $22 billion in 1979 to $25 billion in 1980. A larger increase, from $22.4 billion to $26.8 billion, is reported by the OECD Development Assistance Committee, according to which the average ratio of official development assistance to the gross national product (GNP) of the OECD countries.
rose from 0.35 percent in 1979 to 0.37 percent in 1980. This compares with a ratio of 0.34 percent in 1970, representing an increase of 3.5 percent a year in volume terms.

The increase in foreign assistance for the OECD as a whole in 1980 largely reflects the reversal of a downward trend in the United States, where the ratio of official development assistance to GNP reached 0.27 in 1980, after having declined from 0.32 percent in 1970 to 0.20 percent in 1979. This reversal was due in part to the efforts of the Carter Administration to increase foreign aid and in part to the delayed disbursement of IDA funds.

In the other OECD countries, taken together, the average ratio of official development assistance to GNP remained at 0.43 in 1980. However, a reversal of an upward trend occurred in the United Kingdom, where the ratio of official development assistance to GNP increased from 0.39 percent in 1970 to 0.57 percent in 1979 and declined to 0.34 percent in 1980. The decline reflects the policies adopted by the government of Margaret Thatcher as well as delays in the disbursement of bilateral aid and the postponement of IDA replenishment to 1981.

Little change occurred in the other OECD countries. Among the larger countries, France continues to lead with a 0.62 percent ratio of official development assistance to GNP in 1980, followed by Germany (0.43 percent), Japan (0.32 percent) and Italy (0.17 percent). Higher ratios are observed in most of the smaller countries, including the Netherlands (0.99 percent), Norway (0.82 percent), Sweden (0.76 percent), and Denmark (0.72 percent), while Switzerland (0.24 percent) and Austria (0.22 percent) are among the laggards.
With net disbursement of $7.0 billion in 1980, official development assistance equalled 1.35 percent of GNP in the OPEC countries, much exceeding the OECD ratio but representing a decline from 2.94 percent in 1975 and 1.48 percent in 1979. At the same time, the $7.0 billion figure is substantially above the $3 billion estimate reported in the balance-of-payments table.

The centrally planned economies provided official development assistance of $1.8 billion in 1980, representing 0.12 percent of their GNP. This ratio hardly changed during the seventies; it was 0.14 percent in 1970 and 0.12 percent in 1979. The relevant data are not shown in balance-of-payments statistics.

Current Account Balance

All in all, the current account surplus of the OPEC countries increased from $62 billion in 1979 to $110 billion in 1980. This increase falls short of the rise in the current account deficit of the OECD countries (from $33 billion to $73 billion) and the non-OPEC developing countries (from $38 billion to $60 billion) combined. The difference reflects a decline in the deficit of the centrally planned economies (from $4 billion to $1 billion) as well as statistical error.

The OPEC surplus of $110 billion in 1980 compares with the earlier peak of $59 billion in 1974. However, world export prices excluding oil increased by about three-fourths during this period, so that the real value of the OPEC surplus increased only little. Nor did non-OPEC developing countries on the whole experience problems in financing their deficits, the exceptions being a few countries with high debt-service ratios, such as Turkey.
Estimates for 1981 and 1982

International Trade

The decline in OECD oil imports from OPEC continued in 1981 and further decreases are foreseen in 1982. The expected fall in these imports by 16.5 percent in 1981 and 5.2 percent in 1982 compares with estimated increases of 5.5 percent in the volume of OECD imports from the non-OPEC developing countries in both 1981 and 1982. All in all, total imports into OECD would decline by 2.5 percent in volume terms in 1981 and increase by 3.5 percent in 1982, compared with estimated increases of 0.5 percent and 1.25 percent, respectively, in the combined GDP of the OECD countries.

The decline of OECD imports from OPEC is expected to keep oil prices stable in 1982. Oil prices are estimated to have increased by 11 percent on the average in 1981 as some of the rise in prices in 1980 occurred only in the second half of that year but the higher prices applied in all of 1981.

The described changes would bring a decline in the dollar value of OPEC exports while their imports are expected to increase further. Correspondingly, the OPEC trade surplus would decline from $167 billion in 1980 to $113 billion in 1981 and to $85 billion in 1982; only five months ago, the OECD Secretariat projected surpluses of $160 billion and $134 billion for 1981 and 1982, respectively.

The counterpart of the decline in the OPEC surplus is the projected fall of the OECD trade deficit, from $73 billion in 1980 to $25 billion in 1981 and to $8 billion in 1982; this compares to earlier estimates of $62 billion in 1981 and $40 billion in 1982. Apart from efforts made to economize with oil, increased exports to OPEC as well as favorable price developments would contribute to these results.

In conformity with earlier projections, continued increases in the trade deficit of non-OPEC developing countries are expected, reaching $54 billion in 1981 and $57 billion in 1982 as the terms of trade of these countries deteriorate. Their poor export performance would also lead to a deterioration in the position of the centrally planned economies whose trade deficit is estimated at $1 billion in 1981 and $5 billion in 1982, compared to the surpluses projected earlier.

A lower OPEC trade surplus translates into a lower deficit in the services account as royalties paid to foreign oil companies decline. Nevertheless, the OPEC surplus on the goods, services, and private transfers balance would decline from $113 billion in 1980 to $64 billion in 1981 and to $39 billion in 1982. In turn, the OECD countries are expected to return to equilibrium by 1982, with the non-OPEC developing countries ($85 billion) and the centrally planned economies ($8 billion) experiencing deficits.

Foreign Assistance

The OECD Secretariat projects no change in net official transfers by the OECD countries in 1981 and an increase to $28 billion in 1982. These projections are lower than earlier estimates, reflecting largely expected reductions in U.S. aid under the Reagan Administration. With the negative position of the government of Margaret Thatcher towards foreign aid being maintained, one cannot expect an increase in the average ratio of official development assistance to GNP on the OECD level, notwithstanding projected improvements in France, Germany, Italy, and Japan. There is little hope, therefore, that the 0.40 percent target of the OECD Development Assistance Committee for 1985 would be reached.

However, one can foresee continued increases in development assistance to the least developed countries. Aid to these countries from all sources rose by 129 percent between 1974 and 1979, compared to an increase of 86 percent to all non-OPEC developing countries. Much of the increased assistance has come, and is likely to continue to come, from multilateral sources. Nevertheless, with the stretching out of the U.S. contribution to IDA, these increases will tend to be smaller than in earlier years.

Current Account Balance

The projections of the OECD Secretariat call for a decline in the current account surplus of the OPEC countries from $110 billion in 1980 to $60 billion in 1981 and to $35 billion in 1982. The latter figure matches the 1976 OPEC surplus while prices have increased by about three-fourths in the interim.

The decline in the OPEC surplus would be matched by the fall in the OECD deficit whereas the current account deficits of non-OPEC developing countries and the centrally planned economies would increase over time. The deficit of $71 billion estimated for 1982 in the non-OPEC developing countries would exceed their 1976 deficit of $17 billion several times. The financing of this deficit, in turn, would necessitate greater efforts of recycling on the part of the international financial community.

OFFICE MEMORANDUM

FROM: Bela Balassa
DATE: December 24, 1981
SUBJECT: Back-to-Office Memo: Budapest, December 19 - 21

1. I went to Budapest on December 19-21 in a private capacity to have discussions on my paper "Reforming the New Economic Mechanism in Hungary," which deals with the 1980-81 reform measures. The paper will be presented at the Meetings of the American Economic Association, to be held in Washington, D.C. on December 28-30, 1981, and at the Roundtable on the Hungarian Economy and East-West Economic Relations, to be held in Bloomington, Indiana, on March 21-24, 1982.

2. I met with some of the principal architects of the Hungarian economic reform, including Joseph Bognar (General-Director of Institutes of Economics and Industry), Bela Csikos-Nagy (President of the Price and Materials Office), Otto Gado (former Deputy-President of the Planning Office), and Rezso Nyers (former Minister of Finance), the first three of whom spoke at the Bank in the past. I also gave a seminar on the subject of my paper at the Institute of Economics of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences.

3. The paper was well received and it is expected that it will be published in Hungarian as was my 1978 paper "The Economic Reform in Hungary: Ten Years After." Also, following an earlier invitation, Mr. Csikos-Nagy asked me to lead the discussion on policies of export promotion and import substitution at a day-long meeting, to be held with the participation of high-level government officials, in late August.

4. A dozen leading Hungarian economists will participate at the March Roundtable in Indiana. One group will come to Washington on March 18-19 and plans to visit the Bank to acquaint themselves with the research program and country economic work. Mr. Nyers will come to Washington on March 28th and I suggest that we invite him to conduct an informal seminar at the Bank.

a/ Historical data for the OECD are aggregates of reported balance of payments data for each individual country. For non-OECD groupings, the data are estimated; in deriving the trade balances of these country groups, use is being made of trade statistics reported by OECD countries. Due to statistical errors and asymmetries, the data for the four groupings do not add up to zero.

Because we were somewhat late in making final financial arrangements, it seems the better part of wisdom to defer the date on which your contribution to the volume on U.S. economic relations with the four Asian countries is due. Can I assume that you can get your paper in by April 1, 1982? Of course, if you should finish before then, please let me have it at once.

Let me know if there is anything I can do to help.

J. Bhandari

I have reviewed several of Mr. Bhandari's papers and have also had an extended discussion with him. I am very much impressed by his abilities; he has indeed done a tremendous job for his age. I believe that Bhandari has the combination of a strong professional background together with an interest in problems of developing countries that would suit him for the DRC. In particular, he would be very useful in carrying out energy oriented macro work. I recommend that he be offered a position, if one is available.

Dear Jagdish:

This is in response to your letter of November 5. As a careful reading of my letter of May 15th will show, I did not say that the author assumed expected trade flows to be zero. At the same time, the conclusion remains that the result the author has obtained, i.e. that in the event of identical factor endowment and in the absence of inter-industry specialization no trade will occur, is trivial. This is so obvious that it does not require proof. At the same time, the index of "revealed" comparative advantage requires only 'statistical' neutrality in the sense of contingency-table analysis, defined to mean that the weighted average of all indices is 1.

The alternative index added by the author in the revised version offers some interest. However, it is doubtful that in the absence of world production data on individual commodity categories, it will not find practical application.

For the above reasons, I maintain my recommendation.

Yours sincerely,

Bela Balassa

Reprint Series, Working Papers, and Discussion Papers

We will prepare a submission to the Reprint Series in early January. Please send me 16 copies of papers you would like to have included in the Series, together with a short paragraph indicating its message to the developing countries and the Bank. The paper should be in a journal or collected volume; it is not necessary that publication has already occurred.

I would also like to urge you to submit papers for the World Bank Staff Working Paper Series. This Series includes papers that are of general interest for Bank staff and for people in developing countries as well. In turn, more technical papers can be included in the DRC Discussion Paper Series.

Dear Mr. Silva Lopes:

On Mr. Roy's visit to Turkey he was not able to obtain comments on your report. Mr. Excel told him that he received only your letter but not the report.

I would very much like you to have joined us on the mission to Turkey to discuss the overall report. Unfortunately, however, the Division Chief for Turkey wants to keep down the number of people in the mission, and therefore, it is not possible to ensure your participation.

As regards Morocco, the mission planned for June will focus on tariff and tax issues and it will not have an expert on financial matters. I regret, therefore, that I cannot have the pleasure of your participation on the mission. I hope that we will have other occasions to work together.

Yours sincerely,

I was interested in seeing the excellent volume Rice in West Africa you did with Scott Pearson and others. I am rather disappointed, however, that you have still not sent me your revised chapters. I would need these urgently so that I can put together the volume for publication.

I hope that you have received my letter of August 3 in which I commented on the Mali study that was sent from my vacation. Should this not have reached you, I can send you a copy.

As I mentioned to you at our last meeting, I was sorry that the Editorial Committee did not see fit to include my paper "Policy Responses to External Shocks in Selected Latin American Countries" in the Reprint Series. This paper goes much beyond my summary papers in examining the policies followed in the three countries. I would not like to resubmit the paper to the Editorial Committee but you should feel free to raise the issue if you so wish.

There is also considerable interest at the Bank regarding the Congress. I have sent copies of the volume Growth and Entrepreneurship to the President of the Bank and to the Senior Vice Presidents. Enclosed: Reforming the New Economic Mechanism in Hungary and The Hungarian Economic Reform, 1968-81
TO: Research Committee
FROM: Bela Balassa, DRC
DATE: December 3, 1981
SUBJECT: Evaluation of Completed Research Project: Distributive Impact of Public Expenditures (RPO 670-96)

1. A panel consisting of Messrs. B. Balassa (DRC) Chairman, N. Carter (LC2), P. Isenman (WAl), P. Knight (PPR), and E1 Serafy, (OED), met to evaluate the completed research project, Distributive Impact of Public Expenditures (RPO 670-96). Present at the meeting were also J. Meerman, M. Selowsky and C. Wallich.

2. The Panel had at its disposal the following documents.
   (a) Research Proposal dated September 10, 1973;
   (b) Panel Review Memo dated October 9, 1972;
   (c) Research Committee Decision Memo dated October 29, 1973;
   (d) Progress Report dated April 10, 1974;
   (e) Panel Review Memo dated May 16, 1974;
   (f) Research Committee Decision Memo dated June 21, 1974;
   (g) Research Committee Decision Memo dated November 12, 1974;
   (h) Completion Report with attachments dated May 8, 1979;
   as well as sundry memos relating to the project.

3. The panel reviewed the publications resulting from the research project, in particular

4. There was a consensus among panel members that this was a well-designed research project that fulfilled its major objective at a relatively low cost. The panel has considered the two high-quality books produced by the project as effective means of dissemination to an academic audience and has examined possible ways for further dissemination within the Bank and to developing countries. Summary observations, with reference to the Evaluation Guidelines follow.
A. Objectives, Strategy and Results

5. The research objectives stated in the original submission were: "(i) to determine to what extent and by what modes public expenditures redistribute income; (ii) to assess how public expenditures can be best used to redistribute income." It was originally expected to undertake a pilot study for one country, to be "complemented by a policy-oriented analysis of the public expenditures in question with a view to determining their distributive effectiveness."

6. In the event, two country studies (Malaysia and Colombia) were carried out, providing a thorough analysis of the distributional effects of public expenditures. The studies have not been able, however, to address the second question raised in the original submission by reason of the intrinsic difficulties of the problems involved.

B. Design

7. The studies were well-designed and provided a rigorous analysis of the distributive impact of public expenditures. The methodology developed in the framework of the studies permits their replication elsewhere.

8. The experience of the studies showed the problems related to the availability and the reliability of data for indicating the distributional effects of public expenditure. The data problems were largely overcome and both studies were able to examine expenditures on education, medical care, as well as electricity, water, and sewage disposal.

C. Organization

9. The research was carried out according to expectations and suffered no more than normal delays. There was close cooperation with the governments of the countries studied. Bank Regional Offices were kept informed as work progressed and the results provided a useful input into WDR 1980. The participation of developing country research institutes was not envisaged but useful contacts were maintained with researchers in the two countries. Finally, expected cooperation with developed country institutes did not materialize as their work was completed before the research commenced.

B. Dissemination

10. Dissemination took the form of publication of two books, reporting on the results of the individual country studies, and several journal articles. The Panel suggested the consideration of a further dissemination effort in regard to developing countries as well as the Bank.

11. As far as developing countries are concerned, it would seem desirable to write an article comparing the results of the two studies, examining the usefulness of carrying out similar studies for other countries, and indicating the applicability of the methodology as well as its data requirements. Also, the authors should be ready to provide advice on methodology if applications in other countries are envisaged.
12. As for the Bank, the Panel considered at some length the issue of how the research findings could be communicated to program and to project economists, so as to indicate their relevance for Bank operations. It was suggested that 1-2 page summaries of the relevant research results could make these accessible to specialized audiences (e.g., project officers working on education, health, or public utilities). Attention was further given to the possibility of organizing small workshops to discuss implications for program and project work in specialized areas. This is a more general issue, however, for the Research Committee that transcends the research project under review.
